Bunnies love fresh hay and this should make up most of the food you give them. Hay is good for your bunny's tummy health and also keeps their teeth short and strong.

Did you know that grains, corn and seeds are not good for your rabbit? These might be good for you to eat, but bunnies struggle to digest starch and often become overweight if fed these foods.

3 Reasons to Have Your Rabbit Desexed:

- 1) Minimises unwanted aggression
- 2) Reduces the risk of illnesses such as cancer in females
- 3) Controls population so every bunny can find a good home

Calicivirus and Myxomatosis are two very deadly illnesses for rabbits. Your vet can vaccinate your bunny for Calicivirus, but there is no vaccine for Myxomatosis available in Australia, so it's important to protect your rabbit from biting insects.

Bunnies are very clever creatures that can be litter trained and live indoors where they will be protected from dogs, summer heat & exposure to illnesses. Just remember to rabbit-proof your home.
